NINE-HOUR DAY TO BE TALKED

Assessors and Constitutional Convention Delegates Will Hear Much of It.

Concord, Dec. 15.—The anticipated move of the farmers to bring about a nine-hour law, with 54 hours as a week's work, at the next session of the legislature, is likely to receive considerable impetus this week when the New Hampshire Assessors' association meets in Manchester for a two-day session.

Though the meeting is called to discuss matters of taxation, the fact that a large percentage of the assessors and delegates who will attend the sessions are farmers affords an opportunity to exchange ideas regarding the labor problem confronting agriculturists. At the recent meeting of the state senate, a resolution favoring the 64-hour week on farms was adopted, and it was plainly indicated that those interested would not lose an opportunity to give publicity to their views.

It is known that many farmers who gathered last week in Concord for the annual meeting of the state organization expressed themselves as favoring the securing from each candidate for state office a statement as to how such men stand regarding the passage of a 54-hour week law. This discussion was of an unofficial nature, but many farmers actively interested in politics expressed the opinion that perhaps candidates for political office, Republicans and Democrats, had better be interrogated as to some of the planks which they use in party platforming next fall.

Following the meeting of assessors will come the constitutional convention and again will the farmers get a chance to spread the doctrine that the hired man on the farm should be expected to work nine hours a day. Though no one has suggested that the nine-hour day be established by constitution, nor is there a hint of such a move, some agriculturists who are a member of the convention may advance the proposition that the constitution be amended to include a legal day along with several other propositions to revamp the fundamental law of the state.

However, the convention will afford an excellent opportunity for the farmers to spread their propaganda for a 54-hour week law to be enacted by the next legislature.

PIN MEDAL ON HERO'S MOTHER

Manchester, N. H., Dec. 15.—At a public meeting in the Palace Theatre Sunday night under the auspices of William H. Jutras Post American Legion, a Distinguished Service Medal was pinned upon the breast of Mrs. Joseph Jutras, mother of Lieut. Jutras for whom the post was named, and who was killed in action in France following a display of supreme gallantry.

The cross was presented by Maj. Oscar G. Lagerquist, who was officially delegated to perform this ceremony by Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, former commander of the 25th Division, Mesdres Med. Lagerquist, who spoke most eloquently. Maj. Frank Knox, Maj. Frank J. Abbott and Capt. S. D. Robinson, the latter of Pembroke, made addresses.

DOVER

Dover, Dec. 15.—The funeral of Mrs. Catherine Steward, wife of John Steward, was held Saturday. The services were private, and were at the home of the deceased, Rev. A. T. Jupp, pastor of the Baptist church, was the officiating clergyman. Three sons, Charles A. and George of Haverhill and Walter J. of Northboro, Mass., and a grandson, John P. Steward, were the bearers. The deceased was the daughter of John and Janet Tate Black and was born 78 years ago in Scotland. Her husband came to this country when he was 19 years of age and served in the United States army during the Civil war.

The welcome home for the soldier boys will be held Tuesday evening. The banquet will be served at 7 p. m. and at 7:30 the balconies will be opened to the guests of the city. With a special program of entertainment for the boys with plenty of good eats and drinks, and with all the trimmings, the time the music and the fun will look be remembered by all who participate in the big family reunion.

The air and supper given by St. Thomas Episcopal church at the city banquet hall Saturday evening was very successful. The sale opened at 5 o'clock and although the booths and tables were well supplied before the evening was over everything was purchased. Supper was served from 6 to 8 o'clock.

The tuberculars drive tag day Saturday afternoon and evening was a very lively occasion for the members of the Dover (Civic) club. The girls worked from noon until late evening for they realized the necessity of the drive, and for what the funds were to be used, the sale of Atlantic was very brisk and things now indicate that Dover will easily procure her allotted quota.

The Ladies of Malta held a affair at the hall Saturday evening and the many patrons were well pleased with the manner in which they were entertained.

EVERY MEMBER CANVASSES FUNDS FOR NEW CASTLE CHURCH

On Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock seven teams of ladies and two of children left the New Castle church for the Every Member Canvass. At 5 o'clock, when the teams returned, Charles Protaska and Roy Protaska checked up the results, after which all adjourned to the vestry where refreshments consisting of coffee, doughnuts and sandwiches were served by Mrs. Charles Protaska and Mrs. Charles Becker.

The evening service at 7 o'clock was of a missionary character opening with missionary hymns in which the congregation heartily joined. After scripture and prayer by Dr. Hanson, Mrs. Hanson, pleasingly sang "There's a Wonderful Power in Prayer." Then the result of the canvass was read by Roy Protaska as follows:

Those who were members of the canvassing teams were: Miss Theresa White, Miss Gertrude Robinson, Miss Bickford, Mrs. C. B. Amazeen, Mrs. Eliza Tarrion, Miss Evelyn Dearborn, Mrs. Joseph Boylston, Miss Mildred Yeaton, Mrs. Henry Baker, Mrs. W. I. Haywood, Mrs. John Smith, J. Roy Spiller, Mrs. Harry Yeaton, Miss Anabelle, Ernest Harris, Gela Williams, Francis Harris, Marion Spiller.

PRESENTED FLAG TO POST

Mrs. William Marston Seabury recently presented a beautiful silk American flag to the Anderson Home, the organization of world war veterans, in honor of her only brother, Ensign Charles Emerson Hovey, U. S. N., who was killed in action in the Philippines.

ARREST TWO HOLD-UP MEN

Caught on Top of Moving Freight Train.

New Haven, Dec. 15.—Two masked hold-up men were captured Sunday on top of a moving freight train near New Haven, and are locked up in New London pending arraignment in the town court at New Haven on Tuesday.

The arrests, announced Sunday night by J. R. McMahon, chief of special agents of the New Haven road, are expected to clear up a series of hold-ups in which railroad men have been robbed during the past month. The arrested men are Anthony Cabbie and George Potter, both 23 years old, and said to be known to the New London police.

The arrests were made by two railroad policemen assisted by the constable and flagman of the train. The hold-up men were blue handkerchiefs over their faces and carried loaded revolvers.

WON FOOTBALLS AT DARTMOUTH

Among those who attended Dartmouth's annual football dinner at Hanover Saturday evening, and received the golden football souvenir of the season of '19, were the "D" boys of the Green team are Jackson L. Canfield, '20, of Everett, Mass., captain of the team, and Adolph F. Youngstrom, '20, of Andover, Mass., both well known in this city. This former served with the naval reserve force and was on duty at the local yard for some months.

The "Big Green team" of '19, in comparison the greatest since the famous one which won the first game played in the Harvard stadium.

Captain Canfield was one of the after dinner speakers and gave a fine talk, a bit of organized after-dinner speaking, composed of chosen ideas and work, in which he paid tribute to Coach Spears and to the great team which placed Dartmouth in the front football rank for the season of '19.

The outstanding incident of Dartmouth's annual football dinner was the announcement of the plan for a memorial to the men of the college who gave their lives in the world war. This memorial to Dartmouth's 20 sons who died in the great struggle will be a great playing field, adapted to the requirements of the pioneer American college in respect of compulsory physical training and fitted in conjunction with the Alumni gymnasium which is under way, to aid in the development of the all round men, the physical as well as intellectually trained men, typified by those who died in the service.

EXETER

Exeter, Dec. 15.—Christmas exercises were held Sunday morning in the Phillips church by the students of the academy. It being one of the closing events of the fall term. The sermon was preached by Rev. E. J. Lundy of the faculty and a musical program consisting of organ selections by Roy R. Shewbury, with "The Star Spangled Banner" as a psalm. At the first Congregational church, Rev. E. J. Lundy was observed, it being a commemoration of the landing of the Pilgrims, the program consisting of special music and a sermon by the pastor, Rev. James W. Dickey on "The Pilgrim Spirit." Sunday evening at the Methodist church, Percy E. Jewell, secretary of the Rockingham County Y. M. C. A. spoke on "The Detroit Convention."

Today is Alumni day of the Robinson academy, when the alumni of the school were requested to make a gift during the afternoon. From 3:30 to 4:30 o'clock following the regular recitations, the teachers and the officers of the Alumni association informally met the guests. The alumni of the school is active at present securing funds for the proposed school home and making arrangements for the quinquennial celebration next June.

Saturday evening in the academy chapel Charles F. Underhill of New York recited Dickens' "Christmas Carol" to an audience composed of students and townspeople.

Sakunore Lodge, I. O. O. F. will work the third degree on a class of candidates at its meeting on Thursday evening. Rockingham Lodge will be present as invited guests.

R. E. Moras is having the old Palmer house on Water street remodelled. This is one of the old landmarks on the street having been occupied for many years by the late Charles H. Palmer.

Many of the other old landmarks in that section are also soon to be replaced, principally the old Exeter Opera house which ruins a fine fire still remain.

PASSENGERS MUST HAVE THE SEATS

Boston & Maine to Strictly Enforce Old Rule for Benefit of Public.

Employees of the Boston & Maine Railroad riding on passes, who were comfortably seated on one of the Portsmouth Division trains on Saturday, received a rude shock when they were ordered by the conductors to get up and give their seats to paying passengers who were standing.

For many, many years there has been a rule of the railroad relative to its effect, hitherto apparently unobserved, but on Saturday it was actually put into practice.

The train was crowded with business men, stenographers and clerks, and many were standing in the aisles. The conductors appeared to make their collections of tickets. And then the surprise came. For when the conductor found that there were employees with passes comfortably seated while there were paying passengers standing, he ordered the holders of the privilege to get up. Some complied but there were others who refused, denying knowledge of any rule of the sort, and their names were taken.

Many persons were of the opinion that the action of the conductors was due to some recent order but according to officials of the road the rule is an old one and as far as that particular road is concerned there has been no recent order.

The rule affects holders of passes who are seated to give up their seats to "revenue passengers" who are standing and also orders conductors to see that the rule is enforced. According to one railroad official it is in vogue on every road, he has ever known. There has been some complaining in the past that such a rule has not been observed and at a recent hearing in the Massachusetts State House on higher railroad fares, and concerning use of the roads, great emphasis was placed on the fact that paying passengers were forced to stand on the rails because employees holding passes were sitting, but on one road, or at least one division, of that road, the rule was observed.

SHOOT DRIVERS. SAY SENATORS

Roused by Deaths in Washington Caused by Reckless Motorists.

Washington, Dec. 15.—Shooting reckless automobile drivers on the spot is the cure prescribed by three United States senators for the perilous traffic conditions in Washington. Enraged by the almost daily injury to people caused by heedless driving in this city, Senator Fletcher of Florida said in the Senate a few days ago:

"I would vote to acquit a man who drew his pistol and shot down a reckless driver who came plunging into a group of people waiting for a street car."

Senator Ashurst of Arizona burst out with: "A citizen will soon have to arm himself and shoot down some of the drivers who, with a cynical disregard of human life, run down old men, old women and babies."

The other advocate of shooting the drivers was Senator Myers of Montana, who declared: "About the only remedy seems to be for pedestrians to go armed and to shoot the chauffeurs who approach them in disregard of the law. There are drivers in Washington who ought to be shot down like wild animals at large."

All these expressions were made on the floor of the Senate when Senator Fletcher alluded to the killing of Mrs. Augustus Willard of Palatka, Fla., wife of a former member of the House. She was standing near the car tracks waiting for a street car, when Charles E. Jones, a colored chauffeur, ran her down.

Jones was exonerated and this action caused Senator Fletcher to say: "Perhaps the next man who does a thing like that will be given a medal by the corner."

Senator Ashurst recalled another incident as "the most flagrant case of apparent wilful disregard of human life I have ever known." He said that after a street car struck a pedestrian on Pennsylvania avenue a few days ago and the motorist got out to assist the victim the motorist was him self run down by an automobile and killed.

The frequent accidents in the District of Columbia have led Senator Sherman of Illinois to introduce a bill of drastic character dealing with motor car driving. Senator Myers wishes to have the cars of reckless drivers confiscated. He would have an owner's car taken away from him even though it was the chauffeur who is reckless.

Restrictions must be thrown about the issuance of licenses, senators contend. In one case last week when a woman was killed, the driver of the car and his wife who accompanied him, were both found to be deaf mutes. There is no law in the District prohibiting deaf mutes from operating automobiles.

AMERICAN TROOPS WON THE WAR—SAYS PERSHING

Washington, Dec. 14.—General Pershing, in his special report to Secretary Baker, on the operations of the American army in France, says in effect, although not in terms that the American army won the war.

"It was this spirit of determination animating every American soldier," says General Pershing referring to the Meuse-Argonne battle, "that made it impossible for the enemy to maintain the struggle until 1919."

"Twenty-two American and 4 French divisions," says General Pershing, "had engaged and decisively beaten 47 German divisions, representing 25 percent of the enemy's entire divisional strength on the western front. Of the enemy divisions, 20 had been drawn from the French front and 1 from the British front. Of the 22 American divisions 12 had at various times during this period (Sept. 26 to Nov. 11, 1918) been engaged on other fronts than our own. The 1st Army had suffered a loss of about 117,000 in killed and wounded; it had captured 24,000 prisoners, 847 cannon, 3,800 machine guns and large quantities of material."

With the American army holding the heights dominating Sedan, the report said, and the German line of communications definitely shattered "recognizing that nothing but cessation of hostilities could save his armies from complete disaster, he appealed for an immediate armistice (Nov. 6)."

General Pershing's report follows in detail the growth of the American overseas forces from the date of his departure with a small staff, May 28, 1917, until it numbered more than 2,000,000 men. Every step of organization, every conference with the allied generals and the important decisions reached are recorded.

"The document, comprising a pamphlet of about 100 pages, or 35,000 words, is divided into three sections: 'Period of Organization,' 'Operations' and 'Supply, Coordinations and Administration.'"

Summarizing the military situation which existed in the Spring of 1917 when the United States aligned itself with the Allies, General Pershing said: "In the 5 months ending June 30, 1917, German submarines had accomplished the destruction of more than 1,250,000 tons of allied shipping. During 3 years Germany had been practically all her offensives except Verdun crowned with success. Her battle lines were held on foreign soil and she had withstood every attack since the Marne. The German general staff could foresee now the complete elimination of Russia, the possibility of defeating Italy before the end of the year and, finally, the campaign of 1918 against the French and British on the western front which might terminate the war."

"Financial problems of the Allies were difficult, supplies were becoming exhausted and their armies had suffered tremendous losses. Discouragement existed not only among the civil population but throughout the armies as well."

Within 1 month of his arrival, General Pershing recommended definitely that 1,000,000 men should be in France before May 1918, it being evident that a force of one million is the smallest unit which in modern war will be a complete, well-balanced and independent fighting organization. Plans for the future, the recommendation added, "should be based on three times this force."

"The general was equally specific in choosing the ground for American operations. He says: "Our mission was offensive and it was essential to make plans for striking the enemy where a definite military decision could be gained. While the Allied armies had endeavored to maintain the offensive, the British, in order to guard the Channel ports, were committed to operations in Flanders and the French to the portion of the front protecting Paris. Both lacked troops to operate elsewhere on a large scale."

"To the east the great fortified district east of Verdun and around Metz menaced central France, protected the most exposed portion of the German line of communications, that between Metz and Sedan, and covered the Briey-Long region, from which the enemy obtained the greater part of the iron required for munitions and material. The coal fields east of Metz were also covered by these same defenses. A deep advance east of Metz or the capture of the Briey region, by threatening the invasion of rich German territory in the Moselle Valley and the Saar Basin, thus curtailing her supply of coal or iron, would have a decisive effect in forcing a withdrawal of German troops from northern France. The military and economic situation of the enemy, therefore, indicated Lorraine as the field providing the most fruitful results for the employment of our armies."

American arms drew first blood, the report shows, at Padeschende (Nov. 6-10, 1917) when the 11th engineers joined the British in a successful attack which was part of a general operation designed "to hinder the German conquest of Russia and to prevent, if possible, an attack on Italy, or in the near east."

So afterward, however, came the collapse of Russia and the Italian debacle at Caporetto, with the result that the enemy's legions began to gather quickly in France. Allied commanders viewed the situation with frank apprehension. General Pershing's report indicates, and the pressure for an accelerated movement of American divisions was felt from all sides. At the same time came the suggestion that American units be brigaded with French and British in order that no time be wasted in training. In this connection, the general reports:

"My conclusion was that, although the morale of the German people and of the armies was better than it had been for two years, only an unfavorable combination of circumstances could give the enemy a decisive victory before American support as recommended could be made effective, provided the Allies secured unity of action. However, a situation might arise which would necessitate the temporary use of all American troops in the units of our Allies for the defensive, but nothing in the situation justified the relinquishment of our firm purpose to form our own Army under our own flag."

"While the Germans were practicing for open warfare and concentrating their most aggressive personnel in shock divisions, the training of the Allies was still limited to trench warfare. As our troops were being trained for open warfare, there was every reason why we could not allow them to be scattered among our Allies, even by divisions, much less as replacements, except by pressure of sheer necessity. Any sort of permanent amalgamation would irrevocably commit America's fortunes to the hands of the Allies. Moreover, it was obvious that the lack of homogeneity would render these mixed divisions difficult to maneuver and almost certain to break up under stress of defeat, with the consequent mutual recrimination. Again, there was no doubt that the realization by the German people that independent American divisions, corps, or armies were in the field with determined purpose would be a severe blow to German morale and prestige."

General Pershing had refused utterly to drop his plan for a single American army, acting under its own flag, but consented, because of the existing emergency, to lend the combat divisions at hand to help stem the German offensive of 1918 which, the allied war council foresaw "may very quickly place the allied armies in a serious situation."

"The German rush developed as expected, the report shows but the enemy's success was far greater than had been feared. At Amiens, the British were driven in on a 40-kilometer front between the Oise and Berry-au-Bac, the French lost 50 kilometers on a 35-kilometer front in 4 days. And immediately the Germans utilized the Marne as a defensive flank and the advance was directed toward Paris."

"The gravity of the situation," the report says, led to the famous orders for holding up all supply and troop shipments except "infantry and machine gun units." General Foch who was now made generalissimo estimated that 100 American divisions would be necessary for allied victory.

General Pershing at this time was recommending that his troops be used to smash the Marne-pocket into which the Germans had thrust themselves. He says:

"The Marne salient was inherently weak and offered an opportunity for a counter offensive that was obvious. If successful, such an operation would afford immediate relief to the Allied defense, would remove the threat against Paris, and free the Paris-Nancy Railroad. But, more important than all else, it would restore the morale of the Allies and remove the profound depression and fear then existing. Up to this time our units had been put in here and there at critical points as emergency troops to stop the terrific German advance. In every trial whether on the defensive or offensive, they had proved themselves equal to any troops in Europe. As early as June 23 and again on July 10 at Bapaume, I had very strongly urged that our best divisions be concentrated under American command if possible, for use as a striking force against the Marne salient. Although the prevailing view among the Allies was that American units were suitable only for the defensive, and that at all events they could be used to better advantage under Allied command, the suggestion was accepted in principle, and my estimate of their offensive fighting qualities was soon put to the test."

Although his suggestion was not accepted, American forces found glory in the action which was undertaken at Chateau-Thierry, when the German advance, the 3d division commander reported:

"Although the rush of the German troops overwhelmed some of the front line positions, causing the infantry and machine-gun companies to suffer, in some cases a 50 percent loss, no German soldier crossed the road from Padeschende to Chateau-Thierry, except as a prisoner of war, and by noon of the following day (July 16) there were no Germans in the foreground of the Third Division sector except the dead."

"On this occasion," General Pershing added, "a single regiment of the 3d division wrote one of the most brilliant pages in our military annals. It prevented the crossing at certain points on its front, while on either flank the Germans who had gained a footing pressed forward. Our men, firing in three directions, met the German attacks with counter-attacks at critical points and succeeded in throwing two German divisions into complete confusion, capturing 600 prisoners."

"Due to the magnificent dash and power displayed here and on the field of Soissons by our 1st and 2d divisions, the tide of war was definitely turned in favor of the allies."

"The force of American arms had been brought to bear in time to enable the last offensive of the enemy to be crushed."

Organization of the 1st American army and preparations for its maiden effort—the elimination of the St. Mihiel salient was now taken up. Again it was proposed that American troops reinforce the French for the operation but Pershing again objected. He explains:

"The plan suggested for the American participation in these operations was not acceptable to me because it would require the immediate separation of the recently formed First American Army into several groups, mainly to assist French armies. This was directly contrary to the principle of forming a distinct American Army, for which my contention had been insistent. An enormous amount of preparation had already been made in construction of roads, railroads, regulating stations, and other installations looking to the use and supply of our armies on a particular front. The inherent disorganization of our troops to serve under allied commanders would have grown and American morale would have suffered. My position was stated quite clearly that the strategic employment of the First Army as a unit would be undertaken where desired, but its disruption to carry out these proposals would not be entertained."

"A further conference at Marshal Foch's headquarters was held on September 2, at which General Petain was present. After discussion the question of employing the American Army as a unit was conceded. All the Allied armies were to be employed in a converging action. The British armies, supported by the left of the French armies, were to pursue the attack in the direction of Cambrai; the center of the French armies, west of Rheims, would continue the action, already begun, to drive the enemy beyond the Aisne; and the American army, supported by the right of the French armies, would direct its attack on Sedan and Mezieres."

"It should be recorded that although this general offensive was fully outlined at the conference and present expressed the opinion that the final victory could be won in 1918. In fact, it was believed by the French high command that the Meuse-Argonne attack could not be pushed much beyond Montfaucon before the arrival of winter would force a cessation of operations."

"The choice between the two sectors, that east of the Aisne including the Argonne Forest, or the Champagne sector, was left to me. In my opinion, no other Allied troops had the morale or the offensive spirit to overcome successfully the difficulties to be met in the Meuse-Argonne sector and our plans and installations had been prepared for an extension of operations in that direction."

"The salient had been held by the Germans since September, 1914. It covered the most sensitive section of the enemy's position on the Western Front; namely, the Mezieres-Sedan-Metz Railroad and the Briey Iron Basin; it threatened the entire region between Verdun and Nancy; and interrupted the main rail line from Paris to the east. Its primary strength lay in the natural defensive features of the terrain itself. The western face of the salient extended along the rugged, heavily wooded eastern heights of the Meuse; the southern face followed the heights of the Meuse for 8 kilometers to the east and then crossed the plain of the Woivre, including within the German lines the detached heights of Loup mont and Montsec which dominated the plain and afforded the enemy unusual facilities for observation. The enemy had reinforced the positions by every artificial means during a period of four years."

"I appeal to the energy and the initiative of the commander-in-chiefs and of their armies to make decisive the results obtained."

"In consequence of the foregoing instructions our Second Army pressed the enemy along its entire front. On the night of the 10-11 and the morning of the 11th the Fifth Corps, in the Fifth Army forced a crossing of the Meuse east of Beaumont and gained the commanding heights within the throat of the river, thus completing our control of the Meuse River line. At 6 a. m. on the 11th notification was received from Marshal Foch's headquarters that the armistice had been signed and that hostilities would cease at 11 a. m. Preparatory measures had already been taken to insure the very prompt transmission of the troops of the announcement of an armistice."

Under the headings of ordinance, aviation and tanks, General Pershing gives some first hand information of the actual equipment of the army with those much discussed implements and shows the extent to which America was compelled to rely on the allies.

"Our entry into the war found us with few of the auxiliaries necessary for its conduct in the modern sense. The task of the ordinance department in supplying the artillery was especially difficult. In order to meet our requirements as rapidly as possible, we accepted the order of the French government to supply us with the artillery equipment of 75, 105, 150 mm. howitzers and 155 G. P. guns from their own factories for three divisions. The wisdom of this source was fully demonstrated by the fact, that although we soon began the manufacture of these classes of guns at home, there were no guns of American manufacture of the calibers mentioned on our front at the date of the armistice. The only guns of these types produced at home which reached France before the cessation of hostilities were one hundred and nine 155 mm. guns. In addition 21 5-inch howitzers from the United States reached our front and were in use when the armistice was signed. Eight 14-inch naval guns of American manufacture were set up on railroad mounts and most of these were successfully employed on the Meuse-Argonne front under the efficient direction of Admiral Blankett of the navy."

"In aviation we were entirely dependent upon our allies, and here again the French government came to our aid until our own program could be set under way. From time to time we obtained from the French such planes for training personnel as they could provide. Without going into a complete discussion of aviation material it will be sufficient to state that it was with great difficulty that we obtained the equipment even for training. As for up to date combat planes, the development at home was slow and we had to rely upon the French who provided us with a total of 2675 pursuit, observation, and bombing machines. The first American squadron, completely equipped by American production, including aeroplanes crossed the German lines on August 7, 1918. As for our aviators, many of whom trained with our allies, it can be said that they had no superiors in daring or fighting ability. During the battles of St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne our aviators excelled all the others. They have left a record of courageous deeds that will ever remain a brilliant page in the annals of our army."

"In the matter of tanks we were compelled to rely upon both the French and the English. Here, however, we were less fortunate for the reason that our allies barely had sufficient tanks to meet their own requirements. While our Tank Corps had limited opportunities for its first personnel responded gallantly on every possible occasion and showed courage of the highest order. We had one battalion of tanks engaged on the English front. On our own front we had only the light tanks and the number available to participate in the last great assault of Nov. 1, was reduced to sixteen as a result of the previous hard fighting in the Meuse-Argonne."

General Pershing closes his report with the following "Appreciation":

In this brief summary of the achievements of the American Expeditionary Forces it would be impossible to do in detail the splendid ability, loyalty and efficiency that characterized the service of both combatant and non-combatant individuals and organizations. The most striking quality of both officers and men was the resourceful full energy and common sense employed under all circumstances in handling their problems."

"The highest praise is due the commanders of armies, corps and divisions and their subordinate leaders who labored loyally and ably toward the accomplishment of our task, suppressing personal opinions and ambitions in the pursuit of the common aim, and to their staffs who developed, with battle experience into splendid teams with out superiors in the army."

"To my chiefs of staff, Major J. G. Harbord, who was later placed in command of the service of supply and Major General James W. McAndrews, I am deeply indebted for highly efficient service in a post of great responsibility."

"The material results of the victory achieved were very important. An American army was an accomplished fact and the enemy had felt its power. No form of preparation could overcome the depressing effect on the morale of the enemy of their demonstration of our ability to organize a large American force and drive it successfully through his defenses. It gave our troops implicit confidence in their superiority and raised their morale to the highest pitch. For the first time the wire entanglements ceased to be regarded as impassable barriers and the open warfare training, which had been so urgently insisted upon, proved to be the correct doctrine. Our divisions concluded the attack with such small losses and in such high spirits that without the usual rest they were immediately available for heavy employment in the fighting in a new theatre of operations. The strength of the First Army in this battle totaled approximately 500,000 men, of whom about 70,000 were French."

Without passing to recapitulate the new veteran divisions, Pershing swings them to the east and prepared for the Meuse-Argonne drive, the strategic importance of which he believed to be "second to none on the western front."

"For should this system (of supply through Sedan-Mezieres) be cut off before the enemy could withdraw his forces through the narrow neck between Mezieres and the Dutch frontier, the ruin of his armies in France and Belgium would be complete."

The entire frontal zone was "elaborately fortified" consisting of practically a continuous series of positions 20 kilometers or more in depth and strengthened moreover, by the natural features of the terrain. The story of the hand-to-hand struggle which ensued is told dispassionately by the report which says "continuous fighting was maintained all along the entire battle front" with "the enemy contesting every foot of our front," but by the end of October, the enemy's elaborately prepared positions, including the Hindenburg line, in our front had been broken; the almost impassable Argonne Forest was in our hands; an advance of 21 kilometers had been effected; 18,500 prisoners, 370 cannon, 1000 machine guns and a mass of material captured; and the great railroad artery through Carignan to Sedan was now seriously threatened."

With the enemy gradually breaking before him, Pershing found that his own reserves were beginning to show the effects of the terrific attack. After a careful review of the situation, the report recites that the decision to "continue the attack" was reached on the theory that the enemy divisions were suffering even more."

"Once a German division was engaged in the fight it was practically impossible to effect its release," the general says.

From November 1 to 6, 3 American army corps battered their way to Sedan and to quail the official record:

"By the seventh, the right of the Third Corps had exploited its crossing to a distance of ten kilometers east of the Meuse, completely ejecting the enemy from the wooded heights and driving him out into the swampy plain of the Woivre the Fifth and the First Corps had reached the line of the Meuse River along their respective fronts and the left of the latter corps held the heights dominating Sedan, the strategic goal of the Meuse-Argonne operation, 41 kilometers from our point of departure on November 1. We had cut the enemy's main line of communications. Recognizing that nothing but a cessation of hostilities could save his armies from complete disaster he appealed for an immediate armistice on November 6."

"Meanwhile general plans had been prepared for the further employment of American forces. An advance between the Meuse and the Moselle, to be directed toward Langres by the First Army while the Second Army was to assume the offensive toward Briey from Banin. Orders directing the preparatory local operations involved in this enterprise were issued on Nov. 6."

"Between the 7th and 10th of November the Third Corps continued its advance eastward of Removille, while the 17th French Corps, on its right, with the 79th 26th, and 81st American divisions and two French divisions drove the enemy from the final foothold on the heights east of the Meuse. At 9 p. m. on November 9 appropriate orders were sent to the First and Second armies in accordance with the following telegram from Marshal Foch to the commander of each of the Allied armies:

"The enemy, disorganized by our repeated attacks, retreats along the entire front."

"It is impossible to co-ordinate and expedite our movements."

"The important work of the staff of General Headquarters in organization and administration was characterized by exceptional ability and a fine spirit of cooperation. No chief ever had a more loyal and efficient body of assistants."

"The officers and men of the Services of Supply fully realized the importance of their duties, and the operations of that vast business system were conducted in a manner which won for them the praise of all. They deserve their full share in the victory."

"The American civilians in Europe both in official and private life, were decidedly patriotic and loyal and invariably lent encouragement and helpfulness to the armies abroad."

"The various sections, especially their women, including those of the theatrical profession and the Army Nurses, played a most important part in brightening the lives of our troops and in giving aid and comfort to our sick and wounded."

"The Navy in European waters, under command of Admiral Sims, at all times cordially aided the Army. To our sister service we owe the safe arrival of our armies and their supplies. It is most gratifying to record that there has never been such perfect understanding between these two branches of the service."

"Our armies were conscious of the support and cooperation of all branches of the Government. Behind them stood the entire American people whose ardent patriotism and sympathy inspired our troops with a deep sense of obligation, of loyalty and of devotion to the country's cause never equalled in our history."

"Finally the memory of the unfinished fortitude and heroism of the soldiers of the line fills me with the greatest admiration. To them I again pay the supreme tribute. Their devotion, their valor and their sacrifices will live forever in the hearts of their grateful countrymen."

COAL SUPPLY ASSURED FOR R. L. & P. PLANT

The orders for the cancellation of all coal restrictions on Saturday, as the result of the rapid improvement in the soft coal situation, will save the local stores going under the conservation rules which would have been put into effect this week.

The coal situation is better, although far from normal. General Manager F. A. Holden of the Rockingham Light and Power company, secured ten cars of coal Saturday in Boston and this will keep the plant going for three days and by that time, he expects that he will either have a shipment by water or an allowed some of the 2000 cars of coal already in New England seized by the railroads, but now ordered released. He considers that there is no longer a critical situation as far as the coal supply is concerned.

The restrictions on street lighting, signs and all kinds of illuminator displays will be lifted.

CHRISTMAS SHOPPING RUSH UNDERWAY

The Christmas rush is on in the local stores and with only a week and a half to Christmas, the dealers expect that they will be very busy. There never was a time when the local stores looked as well or were so plentifully supplied with the Christmas novelties and gift goods as at present. They have all bought heavily and are displaying a line of goods that will bear comparison with any of the larger city stores.

There is always one bit of advice to heed in this time and it is shop early. It means an advantage to the buyer as well as the dealer, for those who come early have the pick of the stock and are free from the great fash that always prevails on Christmas week.

Many having been removed the regular business section will open more be illuminated at night.

An Election Echo.

In a recent conference with newspapermen at Washington Chairman Will H. Hays of the Republican National Committee emphasized the tremendous effect the election in Massachusetts had on public opinion throughout the country. Mr. Hays lately wrote to something like 5,000 county chairmen in different parts of the country asking for their views on the general situation in their localities, and from the greater part of them he has received replies, in nearly all of which reference was made to the Massachusetts election and the triumph for law and order which the outcome was regarded to be. Chairman Hays added: "The replies show that throughout the country the people are still thinking of the election in Massachusetts, and that they realize its importance and significance."

It is a long time since any state election has attracted such widespread attention as that held in the Bay State in November, and the reason for this is plain to all. There was a very definite issue before the voters and they all understood it perfectly. It was the issue of law and order as opposed to anarchy and mob rule, and the voters knew where they stood. The result was a verdict so emphatic as to be still echoing throughout the land, as is made evident by the letters received by Chairman Hays from men in close touch with public sentiment.

To quote a line from an old-time poem, "It was a glorious victory," but it would be a mistake to assume that it was a purely party victory. It was an election in which thousands of voters threw partisanship to the winds and aligned themselves with the forces of law and order, standing for the supremacy of the state against class domination from any quarter.

Such was the issue and such was the verdict, and it is reassuring to know that there was such general interest throughout the country. But this is not difficult to understand. The fact is that in practically all parts of the country the same issue is presented, in substance if not in form, and the comments on the Massachusetts result show that the people are ready for the question and may be trusted to act wisely as the opportunity presents itself.

Ours is supposed to be a government by the people, and it will be so long as the people are prepared to stand against the encroachments and aggressions of cliques and clans banded together to further their own selfish interests at the expense of the interests of the public.

That is the lesson to be drawn from the Massachusetts election of November 4, and it is one to give heart to every lover of his country. There are many danger signals at present, and one of these is apparent apathy on the part of the electorate much of the time. But that this apathy is more seeming than real is demonstrated when a test is demanded, which is a most encouraging sign at a time when there is so much cause for apprehension. It shows that the real power in this country still rests in the hands of the people, who may be trusted to use it wisely and well when roused to the defense of their institutions and their rights.

When the price of sugar reaches the figures predicted after the government takes its hands off there is liable to be something in the way of restriction on the part of households. Not everybody is prepared to revel in sugar at from 15 to 30 cents a pound.

The members of the 26th Division are not the only ones concerned by the "jumping" of Major General Edwards in the matter of promotion. The governors of the New England states in recent conference in Boston went on record as against the act, which to outsiders at least appears to deviate from the principle of the square deal.

It is said that 50,000,000 pounds of beet sugar will reach the eastern states before the end of the year. But the chances are that the prices will go up before it reaches the consumers. Under present conditions sugar is in no hurry for distribution.

The faculties and students of the colleges and universities of the country are to be polled in January to obtain "academic sentiment" on the peace treaty. Perhaps some of the students might also like to be heard on the question of prohibition.

The coal strike is settled, but the restrictions are still in force. It is to be expected, however, that there will be early relief. The present restrictions would detract materially from the joy of the approaching holidays.

Not all of Massachusetts' troubles were cleared up by the November election. Mayor Peters of Boston is calling upon citizens to become members of a "committee for the suppression of unpatriotic activities."

At their elections last week Massachusetts cities fairly "tumbled over one another" in their anxiety to vote "wet." Will some one kindly explain just what all this amounts to at this stage of the game?

Chicago gets the National Republican Convention and June 8 is the date for its assemblage. The year 1920 is going to be a very stirring one in this country.

COMMENT

The Passing of War Parliaments

(From the Minneapolis Journal)

The recent elections in France, Italy and Belgium mark the passing of the war parliaments. The chief tasks which the new parliaments face are the stabilization of the currency, the formulation of national budgets, the revival of foreign trade and the establishment of satisfactory industrial relations.

In France the dominant issues were the suppression of Bolshevism and the vindication of the war policies of Clemenceau. Bolshevism presented no serious menace to French institutions and was easily worsted. In Italy Bolshevism gets little foothold, though the extreme Fascists were not rebuffed, nor were the Militarists repudiated. With the new government move openly for the annexation of France or for the reduction of d'Annunzio's forces to national control?

In Belgium the moderate liberals control the policy of state. Belgium entertains no imperialistic ambitions, and all parties are pretty well united to push the work of reconstruction.

Upon the whole the elections in Europe are reassuring. Bolshevism has been repudiated. It is evident that the Latin peoples have had enough of war and are now primarily interested in the constructive work of peace.

In the United States alone the unfinished business of war still impends and the pressing work of reconstruction lags. While other peoples are busy on reconstruction, the legislative and executive departments in this country are gripped in an indecisive deadlock on fundamental issues. Why should America be proud?

NAVY YARD NOTES

N. YARD

Taken to Portland

A deputy U. S. Marshal from Portland arrived at the navy yard on Saturday and took into custody Private Wellington of the machine corps who is held for robbing the U. S. mails while acting as mail-order on the U. S. S. Dolphin when that ship was at the local yard during the summer.

Another Tug for the Yard

Owing to the large number of ships at the local yard the tugboat tug Patagonia has been assigned to the station as an additional yard tug. The work on the water front has increased so much of late that it has become necessary to work in the yard ferry 1048. In moving small craft in the back channel and places where the regular yard tugs cannot navigate. The Patagonia arrived this morning from Boston and after minor repairs have been made the tug will be given yard work and such other duty as may be assigned to her in the First Naval District.

Six Mayors in the Party

Held Up Again

Another hold up of the work on the transport Kappanahook has come about by the lack of funds and the preference given to other ships at the yard in the way of alterations and repairs.

Docking Orders

The mine-sweepers Quail, Cormorant and Lark will be placed in the dry dock on Wednesday. The sweeper Mahard and destroyer Fairfax will follow later in the basin.

Date Set for Jan. 15

The date for completion of work on the destroyer McKean has been set for Jan. 15.

Introductory Banquet

An introductory banquet in honor of Rear Admiral Hulstead, commandant of the yard will be given by the drillmen at the local yard on Tuesday evening. The following officers have been extended invitations to attend: Captain J. H. Adams, Captain H. J. Wynnan, Captain J. H. Sypher, Captain Snyder, Commander Kimball, Commander H. S. Howard, Commander Hyden, Lieut. Commander R. J. Boyd, Lieut. Commander P. T. Wright. The entertainment will be provided by talent from Boston.

PEOPLE'S OPINIONS

The Subject of Psychology

The subject of psychology or the science of the mind derived from consciousness is a deeply interesting study and embraces an unlimited number of ideas and conclusions. The scope of the mind includes varied qualities such as memories, intentions, thoughts, recollections and the perception of the external world. Ofttimes surprising effects will result from a simple thought in the brain of an individual, started either by the happening of an incident or a passing whim. Thoughts may be controlled or regulated by the strength of the will, and the outcome is often attained in the manner we wish it to be. For we are all in a measure, the masters of our own destinies.

If we are able to guide our own emotions, to what extent may we influence the senses and acts of another? Many accomplish this, even being gifted with the power of hypnotism in which they exercise either intentionally or unknowingly. The facts of thought transference and mental telepathy are established facts, though a marvel to many when accomplished at a distance. The controversy regarding communication with departed spirits is over with us and is a subject worthy of serious reflection.

In our short busy lives too many give so attention to the importance of regulating minds to the greatest advantage and considering the effects of thoughts upon others. The best development of the intellect, the viewpoint of another, and many other things should be considered. Psychology is or should be the basis of our social business and philosophical world.

LONG TIME YET ERE PRESIDENT IS WELL

Only Most Vital Matters Are Put Before Him.

M. E. Hennessey in the Boston Globe writes from Washington:

Admiral Grayson and his associates on the medical staff who are treating President Wilson continue to issue bulletins noting a steady improvement in the President's condition. Saturday's bulletin stated that the President is now able to walk about with the aid of a cane. Persistent rumors as to the President's condition led the White House to issue the other day a denial that one of the President's legs was paralyzed.

The President's inability to attend to all of his duties seriously affects the conduct of the executive department and is keenly felt by all branches of the government.

It is pretty generally believed that the President is slowly improving, but it is also believed that it will be a long time yet before he is fully restored to good health.

That the President is still a very sick man is shown by the fact that the new British ambassador, Viscount Grey, has not yet been received. Those who know the President are confident that nothing would give him more real pleasure than to receive this distinguished scholar and diplomat a man for whom he has the very highest regard and the warmest friendship.

Nothing is put up to the President except matters of the most pressing and vital importance—matters which he only can pass upon. Attorney General Palmer is said to be the only cabinet member who has seen him during his illness. Senator Hitchcock has been admitted to the sickroom on three occasions regarding the peace treaty in the senate. The secretary of state, regarded by many as his most important cabinet officer, is on record as saying that he has not talked with the President since the latter's breakdown.

The critics of the administration, democrats and republicans alike allege that except on matters of most vital importance the chief executive has ceased to function. A successor to Secretary Glass of the treasury has not yet been named. Everybody admits that this is a very important office and that there is urgent necessity of filling it without delay. In many respects the head of the treasury is as important as the secretary of state in the conduct of the government's business, particularly in times like the present when many important matters demand the sanction of an authoritative head of the department rather than an acting temporary head.

Secretary Baker of the war department has been visiting Panama and Porto Rico; Secretary Daniels of the navy has just returned from an extended trip. For months the office of secretary of commerce was vacant. A new head of that department has only recently been named.

Those who are in a position to know claim that there is a daily increase of matters piling up at the White House for action by the President, such as pardons and departmental policies, all of which clog the wheels of government and cause complaining on the part of the public.

The clash between Commissioner Garfield and Attorney General Palmer, resulting in the former's resignation, does not tend to promote public confidence in the pressing public questions. It is claimed.

Curate" rehearses twice a week and under the direction of Mr. Mullen is making good progress.

There are more settlers even at the home now than at any time since the opening of the house as a service club. Cement "Pill Box" Blocks for German Street Paving Stopped.

The great cement squares of reinforced concrete which the German army used in constructing machine gun "pill boxes" in No Man's Land and also for blockhouses in the Argonne for their artillery are now being used to repave the war-worn roads of the Fatherland. Following the close of the fighting by the signing of the Armistice which will be a year ago tomorrow (Tuesday) the Germans had on hand about 50,000 tons of the concrete blocks.

"Cement never had to be carried to front-line positions," explained J. Henry Mackinnon, a Knight of Columbus Secretary who is home from a trip through Germany, in telling of the innovation of placing part of the former defense work of the Fatherland on the bumpy highways. "The Hung had long figured on the value of cement reinforced with steel as an invulnerable method of withstanding modern shellfire. During the early invasion of Belgium the high command were unable to whip their transportation system into first class shape and of course they demolished buildings and uprooted streets of Belgian block to secure stones for the construction of dugouts and 'pill boxes' for machine guns and artillery."

"Long before the war on certain railroad lines the great piles of cement blocks had been placed by the military officials in anticipation of war. In the great drives of 1915 and 1916 the Germans just placed these blocks on railroad tracks and hurled them to the front lines. About 1917 they discovered that the circular type of cement put box was a more satisfactory method of deflecting heavy shells and set to work constructing this type of block."

"They had the cement squares so moulded that each was numbered and corresponded much in the same manner that a fabricated ship or house is placed together," explained the Knight of Columbus man. "During my recent trip through the Fatherland I found that the Germans were regaining all the main roads over which heavy war traffic had moved with the cement squares of which there must be more than 50,000 tons now in Germany. Poles found that when they became short of steel they had pulled the rails used to re-enforce the squares out."

Mr. Mackinnon also related a story of a huge salvage pile at Coblenz-Lutzel which has been set aside several times but continues to remain containing old uniforms, shirts, shoes, guns, revolvers, grenades, daggers, sabres, belts, helmets, etc. This property was accumulated by the salvage corps about France and the Rhineland. The home-going soldiers it appears discarded many of their souvenirs on the trip to the coast after leaving the Fatherland, and it is all picked up and brought back to Coblenz-Lutzel where the army men have set three or four big bonfires to get rid of the loot.

MUSICIANS HOLD ANNUAL BANQUET

Mayor Gives Address; Orchestra of 25 Pieces Render Fine Program.

One of the most pleasant occasions in the history of local No. 376, Portsmouth Musicians' Protective Union was that of Sunday afternoon when the annual banquet was held at Odd Fellows' hall from 3 to 6 p. m. Nearly 150 people gathered at the hall and thoroughly enjoyed the excellent program as well as the choice repast. One of the distinct features of the affair was the work of a twenty-five piece orchestra composed of the local union and directed by Gerald B. Whitman. No such large company of local musicians were ever heard before on any occasion and showed what the city has for talent in this line when required. Miss Nellie Barron favored the audience with vocal solos and Frank Barron contributed some very artistic buck and wing dancing. David Cohen, the youngest member of the union and a student at the Portsmouth High school, charged those present with his work on the violin. Among the speakers were Mayor Hislop, Judge B. L. Gifford, Senator O. B. Marvin, Dr. Seth W. Jones and Vice President Adams of the Haverhill Musicians' Union.

Major Chas. H. Hoyt acted as toastmaster and allowed no idle moments during the time of the entire program. The special guests included President W. E. Haggood, Vice President Adams, Secretary H. J. Bannon, George Keen and Arthur McElwington of Haverhill, Mass. Several ladies from that city and Portsmouth were also among the guests.

George J. Kaula was in charge of the arrangements that were perfect in every way.

The officers of the local union are: President, Walter Atkinson; Secretary, George J. Kaula; Treasurer, Goodwin E. Phillips; Board of Directors, Chas. H. Hoyt, Joseph W. Hodgdon, Oliver H. Dowd.

LITTLE FOLKS AT CHASE HOME ENTERTAINED

The 20 inmates of the Children's Home were most pleasantly entertained on Sunday afternoon for two hours by a group of nine young people from the Court Street Christian church. This was the first Sunday that any young men had visited the home to assist in entertaining the little folks. The group of volunteer workers consisted of Miss Elsie Brigham and the Invaluable Class of the Christian Sunday School, of which she is the teacher, and three young men, Roland and Allen Brigham and Herman J. Caswell. An interesting religious program was carried out, including the singing of hymns by all, vocal solos by Herman J. Caswell and Roland Brigham and a trombone solo by Allen Brigham. One of the young misses of the class also read a Bible story. The children were given a large scrap book made purposefully for their use by the Invaluable class.

After the program was concluded the children sang for their guests and also showed them about the home. The matron, Miss Tuttle, much appreciated the kindness of the visitors in coming out purposely to divert the children, and especially, pointed out the program was of a religious character. She hopes that all the churches will volunteer to send some of their young people out from time to time on Sunday afternoon to divert the children and a definite program is much appreciated. The time hangs heavily on the hands of the children on Sunday afternoons and the busy matron is often puzzled how to interest the little folks. This is a chance for many to do good helpful service. The home welcomes the right sort of people — as entertainers who bring to the children some inspiration or thought worth while.

COMMUNITY XMAS TREE

The War Camp Community Service is planning for a Community Christmas tree on Market Square on Christmas eve, which bids fair to attract a large throng to this city from the suburbs. A feature of the community tree celebration will be Christmas Carols rendered by children of the public schools, rehearsals for which have already begun.

NAVAL PRISONERS' FAME AS ACTORS INCREASING

It would appear from the following taken from the Manchester Union that the naval prisoners are destined to become as famous as a college dramatic team.

More than the usual interest was aroused by the appearance at the Strand Theatre, Thursday, Dec. 11, of the Portsmouth naval prisoners. In fact, the fame of these accomplished amateurs of the naval prison is attracting attention in theatrical circles. In Boston and New York, Leo Shubert, the well known Winter Garden producer has offered his Boston opera house for a number of performances, and other New York producers are considering playing the prisoners in Gotham for a week.

This is largely due to the fact that Manchester has given the prisoners the opportunity to demonstrate their talent away from home. Cliff Hall, who has been with the prison production for the last two years, says that the boys never worked so hard on any of their shows as they did for the Manchester performance.

In connection with their regular performance they had an act that was shown for the first time to the New Hampshire State Board of Social Workers at its recent conference in Portsmouth. This was witnessed by several well known Manchester women and, from all accounts, it is one of the most beautiful acts on the stage.

It is known as Becker's Alto Relief, statues in bronze and marble. Twenty-five men made up the act, all prisoners, and a chorus of special scenery was carried for this act alone.

Lieut. Commander Thomas Matt Osborne directed the prison orchestra of 20 pieces, and also spoke between the acts on prison reform.

4 PORTSMOUTH MEN AWARDED WAR CROSS

Secretary Daniels Presents Medals to New Hampshire Men.

Washington, Dec. 15.—The following New Hampshire men have been awarded the navy cross by Secretary Daniels for distinguished service during the war with Germany. The law specifies that these medals shall be issued to men in the naval service who distinguished themselves by extraordinary heroism or distinguished service but not sufficient to justify the award of a medal of honor or a distinguished service medal.

The naval cross is bronze, one and one-half inches wide, with a medallion in the center of crossed anchors and U. S. N. On the reverse side is the how view of a destroyer. The New Hampshire naval officers who will receive this cross are: Lt. Comdr. William J. Chandler, Concord; Lt. Comdr. Francis Cogswell, 32 Livermore st., Portsmouth; Capt. Kautz, 214 State St., Portsmouth; Comdr. Benayard Wygant, Austin St., Portsmouth; Lt. Fred T. Mayes, 304 Lebanon St., Portsmouth.

WILLIAMS TO QUIT WHEN TERM EXPIRES, HE SAYS IN DISGUST

Holbrook, Mass., Dec. 14.—Senator John Sharp Williams, Democrat, of Mississippi, declared he would not be a candidate for re-election to the Senate in a letter made public Sunday.

"I am disgusted with the whole political situation, especially with the treatment of international affairs, as they were questions of party politics," the senator wrote, "and I would rather be a dog and bay the moon than to spend one day in the United States Senate after the expiration of my term."

SENATE TO
CUMMINGS BILL

(By Associated Press)

Washington, Dec. 14.—Congress tomorrow will begin a drive to clear up business before Saturday when a two weeks recess will be taken. The outcome of the drive is doubtful owing to the peace treaty and it will also depend upon the railroad bill.

If the Cummings railroad bill is not passed by Saturday the Republican leaders of the senate have served notice that the recess will be held up. An effort will also be made to get the McNary sugar bill and the Edge bill.

GERMANY
TO ENTENTE

(By Associated Press)

Berlin, Saturday Dec. 13.—In her note of reply to the last Entente communication demanding the signing of the protocol previous to the treaty being put into effect, Germany yields to some extent on the Scaup Flow issue. It is learned in the note Germany expresses a wish for the immediate ratification of the treaty and on the Scaup Flow issue Germany expresses a willingness to make reparations for the battleships sunk.

COLLEGE CLUB HAS MONTHLY GATHERING

The Woman's College Club of Portsmouth held its monthly gathering Saturday evening at the home of Dr. Martha L. Roger on Middle street. Mrs. Du Tilley of Dover the public school nurse, gave a talk on this work in the schools. The club members worked on some Christmas gifts for a good cause and the latter part of the evening was devoted to sociability. Refreshments were served by the hostess.

The next meeting of the club will be held on Saturday, Jan. The club would be pleased to have an increased membership the coming year and as there are many new-comers in this city it undoubtedly will have. Any woman graduate of a college or one who has completed one year of college work is eligible to become a member. Miss Florence Hewitt of the High School teaching staff is secretary of the club.

THE HERALD HEARS

That the joke in light conserving has started once more.

That the street lights in the business section are cut off while electric signs and shop windows are allowed to burn at full blast.

That some one might be able to point out the saving but that person has a hard job.

That the echo of the city election in Ward Three is still heard.

That there are democrats in that ward who say that the art of trimming has only started and there are other elections coming.

That a New York theatrical company recently inserted the following advertisement: Gift Wanted—One who is low-legged, to play part of country girl in theatrical production; previous experience unnecessary. 423 Pittman Building, Times Square.

That the day following, the office of the manager was lined up with men waiting to give themselves over to the attention of women whom they expected to see rushing in for the job.

That they were disappointed when they found only three queens who put their vanity in their pocket and made a bid for the stage work.

That the Tiger A. C. and Creek A. C. are doing their part towards winter sports on the playground.

That candles in the cluster-light globes on the market square would give more light than the electric ones need there.

That the mine-sweepers which have just arrived at the navy yard have completed the most dangerous job carried out by any country engaged in the world war.

That Jess Willard, the former champion heavyweight of the world, has been ordered into court on a charge of profiteering in the sale of wool.

That Willard ought to have left that kind of work to lightweights.

That the police station was the scene of a reunion of drunks on Saturday night.

That one of them, the star performer, amused himself by keeping the whole neighborhood awake with his wild cries and singing.

That it is time a quietus was put on these rowdies who insist on all night squawking.

That a smile that can be bought for a dime is soon swallowed.

That the third game between the Tigers and the Creek A. C. ought to bring out a score on one side or the other.

That the new city government will step in on Thursday, January 1.

That while there may be but a few changes made by the newly elected council, some of them want action in that way.

That it is hoped that the city can see its way clear and not put all the old junk of the fire department in the new fire station.

That many a broadcloth man owes it to marriage with a calico woman.

That the Portsmouth hospital will hereafter take no operating cases on Sunday other than those of an emergency nature.

That with all the business done on Vaughan street and all the travel there the city should put in something that resembles street lights.

That the boys are not getting any nearer to near beer. They say it ranks with a dead mule.

That if the police stop all the speedsters in town they will go on the over-time list for such a job.

That a lunacy board and not the court should examine some of these wild drivers.

That a local physician was called in three cases within a period of fourteen days where twins were born.

That none of the local barbers have yet come out in the limelight with their quick record of shaving and haircutting.

That a Water street barber says he holds the record and that no chat goes with the job.

That his brother barbers say he makes a record only when he shaves himself.

That the marine guard at the navy yard are talking of having a bowling team.

That many a man who at this time of year begins to think up his New Year resolutions will not now have to worry about a trip on the water wagon.

That if all the reformers had their way in this world it would be some like for the common people.

That the people would rest easy if some of the present laws were enforced and not so many new ones forced on the country.

That the Boston and Maine railroad is enforcing the rule which covers employees riding on passes.

That no employee with a pass shall occupy seats in passenger trains and force paying passengers to stand.

That many a man is robbed of his friends while watching his enemies.

That a new baker shop is going in on Vaughan street near the telephone exchange.

That perhaps all things comes to him who waits, but there are many things not worth waiting for.

That the public would like to get in on the sale of clothing, shoes, etc., at the navy yard.

That some janitor's work the wrong way, they provide plenty of heat on warm days and make a cold storage out of the heating system in frigid weather.

That no matter how positive a woman is on anything she is seldom willing to bet money on it.

That many a pretty shoe covers an ugly foot.

That the police don't sleep tonight.

That a new lumber company may soon be doing business in this city.

A GROWING NEED AT NAVY YARD

Navy Must Spend Some Money for Storage Tanks and Oil Feeding System.

One of the growing needs of the Portsmouth navy yard is oil tanks for storage of fuel oils. The matter has been taken up by the yard officials and the department heads at Washington which means this improvement must come as soon as possible. The storage of oil is made necessary by the assignment of oil burning craft to the Portsmouth navy yard.

This station must provide oil for the mine-sweepers, destroyers and the Eagle boats. So far the yard has been working under difficulties from the fact that the oil is furnished by tank cars switched in and out of the Boston and Maine railroad, causing more or less rehandling and a loss of time.

It is understood that the navy department is planning for the construction of large tanks to take care of the oil that will eventually be sent to the yard in tank steamers and pumped direct from the steamers to the tanks. The matter is, however, in its infancy and some time will elapse before the department will order the work started.

The arrangement as it is at present is costing the government a large amount of money in freight transportation which would be eliminated by the use of tank steamers bringing the necessary fuel.

CHRISTMAS IS ALWAYS MERRIER

to the young man with money in the bank. He can enjoy the holiday without worry as to the future. Those who spend all and have none will never have anything. Christmas to them must be a hollow mockery. If you have not yet commenced to save why not do so now. Make yourself a present of a bank book even if you have but one dollar to deposit. It will be as fine a gift as you will receive.
